The past is here

FRIDAY onward, till April 10, 9 am-9 pm:

An exhibition of recent works by Suruchi Choksi and Rithika Merchant, Reliquaries, takes a closer look at how we construct and envision our pasts — both collective and personal. The artists capture two aspects of recollecting that are radically different, yet inextricably linked to each other.

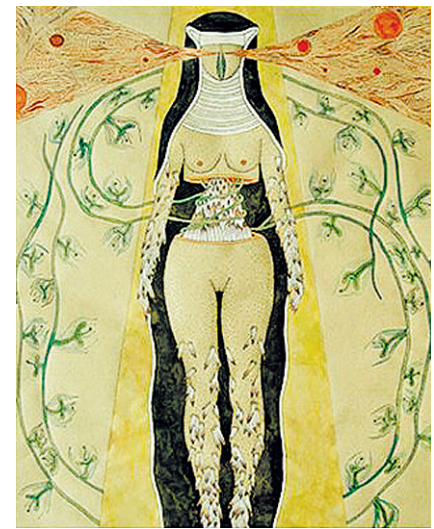

In Suruchi's photographs, printed on aluminum and paper, as well as in her six-channel video installation, she toys with the idea of photographs being a conductor in the orchestration of our own personal memory. Her distressed and distorted personal photographs tell a story that has evolved over time, both physically and emotionally. She delves into each layer of the image, assuming that no picture and no story is absolute at any given time, for it is seen through filters that every individual carries in their mind's eyes.

Rithika's characters hark back to a sense of belief in ritual with each intricate watercolour building a mystical narrative from one image to the next. An inherent feminism exists in her decoration, undermining the minimalism of modernity that views a woman just as a muse. Her use of cut out, almost puzzle-like pieces, effortlessly permits the viewer to piece together a narrative independently, using some individual, magical thinking.

Granola bar and granola in a jar at Love and Cheesecake

Go granola

ONGOING, 11 am-11 pm: All those delicious desserts at Love and Cheesecake are great if you have a sweet tooth but don't exactly make you think health. But now, the patisserie hopes to change that with their latest offering — granola jars and bars. Their granolas have the usual goodness of oats, nuts, honey, dried fruit and seeds, and are also available in pretty, little jars.

It's all about a doll

SATURDAY, 2 pm: The theatre group, Theatrewaala, presents their latest offering, Peggy Pane, which is a musical for children.

A little girl's grandmother makes her a doll, called Peggy Pane, who is actually quite naughty and enters the toy nursery to create havoc for the other toys by pulling tricks at them, scaring them, and troubling them. The toys keep trying to tell Peggy to stop and also try to teach her a lesson. But will Peggy ever listen and turn a new leaf?
